RE: Long-term Obligations for Grants from the Washington State Recreation and Conservation Office
(formerly the Interagency Committee for Outdoor Recreation, IAC)

Recent coverage of the homeless crisis in Seattle and its impact on Seattle parks has triggered this letter. Since 1966, the Washington State Recreation and Conservation Office (RCO) has awarded over 130 grants to the City of Seattle to help acquire and develop parks, trails, boating facilities, natural areas, and to restore habitat. In light of proposed legislation being considered which would allow public areas to be used for temporary housing, this letter serves as a reminder that RCO grants come with a long-term obligation to maintain the project area as originally funded. None of the grants include homeless encampments as an allowable use of park or conservation lands.

Attached is a list of grants awarded to the city. You may access information about each specific grant award by selecting the link in the first column, which will take you to RCO's Project Snapshot.

Failure to comply with the long-term obligations of an RCO grant has certain consequences for your organization to mitigate for the loss of grant-assisted land or facilities. This may require the appraisal of the property and the purchase of similar replacement property or development of replacement facilities equal to the grant expended. It also may jeopardize future RCO grant funding for the city.

For more information about RCO grant obligations, please contact Myra Barker, Compliance Specialist, at RCOStewardship@rco.wa.gov or (360) 902-2976. I look forward to working with you to protect and steward RCO's investment in parks and other recreational amenities, open space, farmland, and wildlife habitat and to help the city meet its goals.

Long-Term Grant Responsibilities

Long-Term Obligations

Grant recipients have long-term obligations for land purchased, developed, or restored with RCO grants. When an element of the project no longer meets the terms in the grant contract or the site no longer meets the original function of the grant, the grant recipient must check with RCO about resolving the issue.

These responsibilities are described primarily in the project agreement and RCO's Manual 7 Long-Term Obligations. RCO and the grant recipient must inspect funded sites to ensure these obligations are upheld.

Types of Changes

There are two ways a site or structure may no longer meet the terms of the contract or the original function of the grant: Element change or conversion.

Element Change

- Minor element changes do not conform to the project agreement but have no negative impact on the recreational opportunity. Example: A 15-car parking lot funded in 1995 is reduced to an 11-car lot to make room for a new park feature.
- Major element changes do not conform to the project agreement and negatively affect, but do not eliminate the recreational opportunity. Example: A tennis court funded in 1995 has been turned into a skate park.

- Exceptions include acts of extraordinary vandalism or arson, acts of nature such as floods or earthquake, and obsolescence (structure past its useful life).

Remedy

May require an amendment to the project agreement, approval from the Recreation and Conservation Funding Board or Salmon Recovery Funding Board, or remediation.

Conversion

A conversion occurs when:

- All or part of the property is conveyed for an ineligible use, or to an ineligible third party.
- Public or private uses impair the original purpose of the grant.
- Non-eligible, indoor facilities are constructed.
- Public use is terminated for more than 180 consecutive days.

Remedy

If RCO assisted with acquiring the site, it must be replaced with new property of equal utility and market value in today's dollars. If RCO assisted with development or restoration of the site, it must be replaced with new facilities or restoration of equal function.

Long-term Obligations

- Maintain the funded site and structures as originally funded.
- For recreation projects, maintain public outdoor recreation opportunities in a safe and attractive manner and at reasonable hours and times of the year.
- For habitat projects, manage and maintain the habitat values or functions.

Please Contact RCO

before you significantly alter a grant-funded site or facility to see if your plans are compatible with the project agreement and RCO policies.
